

No celebrations on this infamous birthday

WASHINGTON (AP) — No crowds at the White House, no celebrations, no memorial services, not even a footnote on most calendars.

It is, perhaps, a date destined to live in limbo, neither cherished nor mourned. Three years ago today, President Richard M. Nixon resigned.

He quit the White House with a teary speech and an unemotional letter. He left during a tumult that had come to encompass all Americans, but Gerald R. Ford, Hugh Scott and Peter Rodino more than most.

Today, those three and the nation make no public observance of the date.

So, too, for the former president, who quit with this letter now displayed in the National Archives, in a room next to the Constitution: "I hereby resign the Office of President of the United States."

He flew to California, where he remains, saying little except in paid-for television interviews.

Scott, now retired, but then the Senate Republican leader, watched Gerald Ford sworn in on that day three years ago, then hurried out of the East Room, through the crowds that had stood vigil in all those final hours, and up to the Capitol.

At his own office, he pulled out his finest gold-sealed stationery and he, too, wrote a letter that day, one of even greater brevity. Unlike Nixon's letter to the secretary of state, Scott's addressee did not require a zip code:

The Honorable James Madison

"Sir:

"It worked.

"Sincerely,

"Hugh Scott

"United States Senator."

It was a therapeutic exercise, a sigh of relief shared by many, that the Constitution fathered by Madison and the system it ordained had functioned under the severest strain.

On Aug. 8, 1977, the anniversary of the day Nixon announced his intention to resign, Jimmy Carter sat on the edge of a peanut field, pulled a penknife from his bluejeans and slit open several watermelons to share with bodyguards and reporters.

He talked not of history or constitutional crises but of the deer in that field, and the army worms, and his wife's great-great-great-grandfather.

The White House itself was quiet. There were normal public tours. The normal spires by the guides. Nothing about "On this day ..."

Gerald R. Ford, who learned at midday on Aug. 8, 1974 that he would become the nation's first non-elected president, is at his retreat in Vail, Colo.

Peter Wallace Rodino, Democrat of New Jersey, never felt quite comfortable riding the crest of a tidal wave. If Nixon had not resigned, he would have delivered the opening speech on Aug. 10, 1974 for a virtually certain impeachment of the President.

Then he would have been the prosecutor in the Senate.

Rodino, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, "is at home today, in the district, relaxing," said an aide, almost laughingly.

Rodino turned down consideration as Jimmy Carter's running mate. And on Aug. 10, 1974, he celebrated by getting to the office as late as 9:45 a.m.

The same was true today for the rest of the Congress, at home, relaxing.

In Washington and across the land, people gathered around their television sets three years ago, first on the night of Aug. 8 to hear Nixon announce his resignation, not for crimes but for the loss of "a strong enough political base," then on Aug. 9, for his farewell to the Cabinet and Ford's swearing-in.

The tension, particularly in the capital city, was so tight for all those hours that it could have been twinged like a bow string.

Finally, Ford said, "Our long national nightmare is over."

So Monday night, the crowds at the television sets yawned through an exhibition football game between the Washington Redskins and the Cleveland Browns and today, if you tuned in at three minutes past noon, the moment Gerald Ford completed his oath three years ago, you might have caught the opening of "Shoot for the Stars" or "Let's Grow a Garden."

$4 million Sinatra crash suit

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — The widow of the copilot of the plane in which Frank Sinatra's mother died has sued two federal agencies for a total of $4.3 million.

Paula N. Foley of Las Vegas filed the suit Monday in U.S. District Court claiming negligence by the U.S. Department of Transportation and the Federal Aviation Administration.

The suit claims the pilot was under the control of FAA employees "who were in the process of providing direction and clearances."

'Looters not hungry; just plain thieves'

NEW YORK (AP) — The Brooklyn district attorney says looters didn't ravage stores during last month's power blackout because they were hungry or poor. He says most simply were thieves.

Dist. Atty. Eugene Gold released figures Monday which he said contradict assertions by some public figures that during the blackout looters were preoccupied with stealing food.

Gold's figures are based on 176 persons indicted of 1,004 arrested in the July 13-14 looting in Brooklyn, the hardest hit of the five boroughs.

Some 48 per cent had fulltime jobs, Gold said. One indicted man was a $372-a-week meatcutter. Other defendants included a sailor from the USS Kansas and eight city or federal employees.

Eleven per cent of the indicted persons were students. Of the remaining 41 per cent classified as unemployed, 30 per cent were enrolled in paid poverty or training programs, Gold said.

The average annual income of the working defendants was $7,050. Just 8.5 per cent of the indicted were on welfare.

After last month's blackout, President Carter said that although there was "no excuse" for the looting, it was an "additional indication" of the need to revitalize poor urban areas "neglected too long."

"It is also important that public officials like myself try to understand the reasons for it," Carter said then.

Carter-Senate energy gap widens

WASHINGTON (AP) — Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal today rejected the Senate Finance Committee's arguments that America's energy companies need more federal tax incentives to develop new reserves.

In drafting President Carter's national energy plan, Blumenthal told the committee, "We could have relied entirely on market incentives coupled with total deregulation of oil and natural gas prices."

But Blumenthal said relying on market incentives and deregulation would have created enormous distortion in the nation's economy and unjust windfall profits for the energy companies.

"The American people, with justification, would have rejected such an approach out of hand," Blumenthal told the committee.

James Schlesinger, sworn in last week as the first head of the new Department of Energy, defended Carter's program before the committee on Monday and repeated the administration's request for higher gasoline taxes.

SECRETARY BLUMENTHAL

panel to put back into the bill a provision giving the President stand-by authority to raise the gasoline tax by as much as 50 cents a gallon in five-cent yearly increments.

Sen. Russell Long, D-La., committee chairman, said he thought the 50-cent tax proposal had no chance.

Other committee members objected to a plan to give back money raised by the proposed tax in the form of rebates.

Sen. Spark Matsunaga, D-Hawaii, said the proposal, to return money to drivers as well as non-drivers, was "a welfare program...a nightmare."

The House killed the standby gasoline tax proposal, along with moves to increase the federal gasoline tax by four and five cents over its present four cents a gallon.

Schlesinger said he also wants the tax on "gas guzzler" autos tightened to require better gas mileage and asked that exemptions to the industrial oil and gas use tax be cut.

But committee members seemed to indicate that they favor more basic alterations to the House version of the bill.

Long, whose state is rich in petroleum, said he favors adding broad incentives to encourage more energy production. Most of the other committee members agreed.

Long said he favors turning part of the program's crude oil tax revenues over to oil companies to encourage exploration. He said most of the remaining revenue could go into subsidies for companies seeking to develop oil shale extraction, coal gasification and methane gas production.

"I'd like to see us increase tax advantages to get the job done," Long said.

"Some people are scared to death someone's going to make a profit. We ought to hope someone does make a profit or we're going to stay in this mess forever."

PRESIDENT SLICES MELON

PLAINS, Ga. (AP) — Jimmy Carter pulled a penknife out of the pocket of his blue jeans and set to the work at hand.

He cut into the end of a watermelon, sliced all the way up to the other end, lifted the melon a few inches off the ground and dropped it, splitting it all the way through. Then he cut it into another, sliced it deftly, dropped it and split it, and then another and another until at least a half dozen were opened.

This was Jimmy Carter, the grown-up country boy.

He once told a group of Democratic Party contributors that if they ever wanted to know the real Jimmy Carter they'd have to see him at home in Plains.

This was Jimmy Carter at home.

The President of the United States inspected peanut fields Monday, talked about parched corn fields, peanuts and his wife's family tree and chatted with a tenant farmer who lives on his family's property.

And, he served watermelon, cool from the shade of an old farm shed, to his companions: brother Billy Carter, Secret Service agents, aides, reporters and photographers.

He tramped through rows of peanut plants, saved by recent rains. He bent down and pulled a few plants out of the ground to inspect the white, soft nuts growing on the roots. He looked at the damage done by army worms and deer.

"The deer are really bad in those peanuts against the woods," he said, pointing to the end of the peanut rows. "And a lot of the army worms that would ordinarily be in the corn fields are now eating the peanuts and other crops because they don't have any corn to eat."

The rains that have saved the peanuts didn't come soon enough for the corn.

He rode a four-wheel drive station wagon that kicked up a minor dust storm as it drove up and down the dusty dirt roads. Finally, he reached the old homestead that his wife's great-great-great-grandfather settled in 1833 when the Indians moved out.

The land is owned by Carter Farms now, purchased by the back from Mrs. Carter's grandfather.

Leonard Wright, a tenant farmer, works the fields.

Wright lives in a one-story, unpainted wood frame house where Mrs. Carter's mother, Mrs. Allie Murray Smith, grew up. "This old house has been here a long time," Carter said.

The family cemetery is across a one-lane dirt road, shaded by an old live oak. A chain link fence was built around the 50-by-100-foot plot to "protect the graves from the hogs," Carter said. "They'd go in there and root."

He inspected the peanut crop Wright is growing and then walked up to the shed and spied the watermelons. The President of the United States, out in the countryside under a hot South Georgia sun, knew just what to do.

$850,000 transit fund theft

Suspect arrested as he deplanes in Vegas

WASHINGTON (AP) — An employee of the federal Urban Mass Transit Administration is charged with diverting $850,000 in federal funds to his own use.

The money William C. Sibert, 29, is accused of stealing had been earmarked for the Metropolitan Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority.

Sibert, of suburban Suitland, Md., was arrested Friday in Las Vegas, Nev., as he and a party of friends stepped off an airplane. According to an affidavit, Sibert had $59,000 in cash on him when arrested.

Sibert is a low-level financial assistant with UMTA. Part of his duties included giving initial approval to vouchers requesting Department of Transportation funds for various state and local rapid transit systems, the affidavit said.

Prosecutors allege that from March 19, Sibert took on the identity of the Atlanta transit agency, depositing $724,361.09 in an account at Suburban Trust Co. It was alleged he made a number of deposits in which he placed a portion of the face value of the U.S. Treasury check in the bank and took the balance in cash.

Arrested with Sibert in Las Vegas Friday was Lois Ann Benson, who was not otherwise identified. Prosecutors alleged that she had received about $65,000 from Sibert in personal and certified checks.

Crucial U.S.-Israel talks

JERUSALEM (AP) — Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, carrying word of possible Palestinian concessions, arrived in Israel today for what could be the climax of his current Middle East peace mission.

Vance faced close questioning by Prime Minister Menahem Begin and other Israeli leaders on whether the United States remains committed not to negotiate with Yasir Arafat's Palestinian Liberation Organization — PLO.

Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan welcomed Vance at planeside upon his arrival from Saudi Arabia and said, "Whenever you accept our views, we will be in full agreement with you."

Dayan was speaking in a light vein, but his comment foreshadowed difficulties in Vance's talks here.

At a news conference in Taif, Saudi Arabia, before flying here, Vance confirmed that he has had indirect contacts with the PLO through various Arab intermediaries.

"We have had no direct contact with the PLO," he said, adding: "We are informed by the various Arab parties as to the positions of the PLO and have been so informed as we proceeded through my visit." Vance has been in the Middle East for nine days.

Queen's trip sparks Irish riots, 2 dead

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Rioting and gun battles broke out in this tense city early today, one day before Queen Elizabeth II's visit to Northern Ireland. A Roman Catholic youth and a British trooper were shot dead in separate incidents.

Authorities said British soldiers killed a 16-year-old Roman Catholic youth who they claimed was throwing gasoline bombs. Three hours later, a sniper of the outlawed Irish Republican Army — IRA — shot a British trooper dead near where the youth was killed, police said.

It was the fifth straight day of intensified violence in the British province. Members of the IRA's Provisional wing — the "Provos" — have vowed to unleash a so-called "blitz to remember" for the queen's two-day visit.

Today's fatalities raised the known death toll to at least 1,774 in eight years of sectarian warfare in Northern Ireland.

British military headquarters said the youth, identified as Paul McWilliam, was shot down by an army patrol after the soldiers caught him and other teen-agers hurling fire bombs into a lumberyard.

"A patrol ordered the youths twice to stop throwing the bombs," an army spokesman said, "but this one youngster threw two at the patrol and was shot."

The Provisionals claimed the trooper shot McWilliam in the back.

A military spokesman said the soldier was killed later in an elaborate IRA trap.

Laetrile bill defeated by Assembly committee

SACRAMENTO (AP) — A California Assembly committee, heeding warnings it would "open the floodgates for all sorts of quackery," has killed a bill to legalize Laetrile for cancer treatments.

A 5-6 vote, one short of passage in the Assembly Health Committee, rejected the Senate-passed bill Monday.

Twelve states have legalized use of the controversial apricot pit extract in cancer treatment, although the substance has not been approved by the Federal Drug Administration.

The vote was a victory for the administration of Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. and the National Cancer Institute. But the measure's author, Sen. William Campbell, R-Hacienda Heights, said he would push for approval again next year.

The committee voted after hearing emotional testimony from actor-comedian Red Buttons, who described how his wife has successfully fought cancer with the help of those cases, the treatment would

Buttons, who left the Capitol before the vote, was applauded by Laetrile supporters in the packed gallery when he concluded:

"People who are harassing people for the use of Laetrile should be indicted for murder."

But U.S. Rep. Henry Waxman, D-

Los Angeles, who said he believes Laetrile useless, urged California to await federal testing of the substance.

Donald Kennedy, head of the Federal Drug Administration, and Waxman said legalization of Laetrile in California would convince some people that the substance works.

The bill stated that it was not making such a judgment.

Approval in California would "open up the floodgates for all sorts of quackery," Waxman warned.

"Any drug which keeps a patient from seeing a physician or gives a false hope... is not a safe drug; it is condemning those people to die."

Campbell argued that the matter was freedom of choice, not whether Laetrile was effective as a cancer treatment.

He accepted amendments that would allow prescription of Laetrile if two doctors certified in writing that a patient was dying of cancer. In those cases, the treatment would be in conjunction with conventional methods unless a doctor decides that standard procedures were useless.

Kennedy said, "I would urge you to wait, to the end of next year, when we expect to get results" of federal tests.

Inequities in school funds widen

SACRAMENTO (AP) — The rich school districts in California are getting richer, and the poor aren't keeping pace, a new survey of California school finances reveals.

The inequities in tax rates and spending per pupil have not been narrowed, and in some cases they are getting worse, the report by the State Department of Education showed Monday.

California's richest school districts are spending six times as much per pupil as the state's poorest districts. And the rich districts are raising that money with the lowest local property tax rates in California.

Those are the inequities that the California Supreme Court ruled must be corrected. Legislation now pending before a special Senate-Assembly school finance committee is intended to meet that problem.

The 118-page summary of financial data on California's 1,046 local school districts showed some narrowing of the gap between wealthy and poor districts in urban areas.

But among the small districts in rural areas and in some suburbs, the inequities are increasing, the report showed.

The figures are all for the 1975-76 school year, the most recent for which comparative data is available.

The report said the highest school tax rate in the state was levied in the Mt. Pleasant School District, a region of suburban homes and no industry in east San Jose.

The combined school tax rate in the Mt. Pleasant district was $8.16 per $100 of assessed value: $5.03 for the elementary district, $2.88 for the high school district, and 25 cents for the county office of education.

The lowest combined school tax rate last year was $1.11 per $100 in the oil-rich Elk Hills School District in Kern County: 67 cents to support the high school district, 18 cents for the elementary schools and 26 cents for the county.

That means the owner of a $37,000 home in east San Jose pays, after credit for the homeowner's exemption, $619.50 per year in property taxes for schools. But the owner of a $37,000 home in Elk Hills pays only $84.25 for schools.

But because of the vastly bigger tax base per child in Elk Hills, the district raised $4,010 per pupil — second highest in California — while Mt. Pleasant raised just $1,232 per pupil.

Altogether, the latest figures show, 76 of California's 1,046 local districts raised less than $1,000 per pupil, the lowest being the tiny Chicago Park district in Nevada County, at $728 per pupil.

McKittrick, a neighbor of Elk Hills on another school district in an oil field, raised the most, $4,228 per pupil, on the third lowest combined school tax rate, $1.54 per $100 of assessed value.

Battle to contain giant forest fires continues

By The Associated Press

The battle against giant forest fires burning out of control in California entered its second week today with no victory in sight for the 10,000 firemen called to duty when a lightning storm sparked hundreds of blazes statewide.

On the central Pacific coast a 77,000-acre blaze was permitted to burn wildly on one border while 3,100 firemen tried to shore up lines on the other side and save homes and vital watershed lands.

In the northeast corner of the state, several big fires — one of them 80,000 acres — defied normal patterns and burned over lava beds, usually a natural fireline.

"We got a lot of open line left and a lot of rugged country," said California Department of Forestry spokesman Dale Wireman.

The bleakest front for the firefighting army — comprised of members from all 48 contiguous states — was the explosive blaze tearing through steep timberland in the Los Padres National Forest on the state's scenic central coast near Monterey and Carmel.

The blaze had consumed nearly $150 million of watershed by Monday, forcing fire boss Myron Lee to switch tactics and concentrate efforts on the fire's northern sections.

"I have had to make some decisions ... that were not easy to make but were essential to protect a high priority watershed," he said.

The watershed purifies water and protects against mudslides for Monterey, Carmel and other towns in the Carmel Valley.

"This action could conceivably double the size of the fire," said Lee, who explained that the southeastern border of the fire would be left undermanned because of the shift.

In the state's far northeastern corner, several fires ranging in size from 7,000 acres to the 80,200 acre fire called "Scarface" continued to burn through timbers and over lava beds.

In Southern California, a wind-drive brush fire burned 900 acres in Cabazon Canyon east of Banning in Riverside County.

There was no estimate from the U.S. Forest Service on when the fire, which began Monday, would be contained.

No structures were threatened by the fire, a Forest Service spokesman said.

Another child porno hearing set for Friday

SACRAMENTO (AP) — Everyone at the legislative hearing on child pornography appeared willing to help stamp it out.

But no one seemed to know how to write a law that the courts would let stand.

That was the scene late Monday before the Assembly Criminal Justice Committee.

The members heard testimony on eight bills aimed against the use of children and minors in making pornographic materials.

After two hours, the members decided to mail them over till the next meeting Friday.

Law enforcement officers pleaded for laws with teeth. "Today the prostitutes' trick is to turn their obscenities into free speech," said one.

But representatives of the American Civil Liberties Union and California Attorneys for Criminal Justice objected that some provisions would have onerous side effects, although no one spoke in favor of child pornography.

"Many of these bills pose tremendous constitutional problems," said one.

"What we're dealing with here is properly free speech," said another.

The authors, each with wide citizen backing, attacked the problem in different ways, sometimes in combination.

Some would redefine the word obscenity, on which the court system has the last word.

Others would increase penalties on present laws, stake out protection of children as more important than other considerations, or go after those who employ or profit from minors for such uses.

CITY HALL PICKETED

Residents picketed Claremont City Hall at noon Monday. They said they are concerned about the impact that Chinook International, a camper maker, will have on the area around Arrow Highway and Cambridge Avenue if the firm moves from La Verne. The residents plan to continue their protest at the City Council meeting tonight.

Power plant future dim

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Plans for a mammoth power plant to provide electricity for 1 million homes in Southern California, Nevada and Utah may have to be dropped if the U.S. refuses to allow it to be built near two national parks in Utah.

U.S. Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus has recommended that the coal-fueled Intermountain Power Project not be built near Capitol Reef and Canyonlands national parks because of a possible environmental damage, a Los Angeles newspaper reported today.

The $4.5 billion, 3,000-megawatt plant was created under the auspices of the Intermountain consortium, formed by the Southern California cities of Los Angeles, Pasadena, Burbank, Glendale, Anaheim and Riverside.

Survivor of electric shock

ESCONDIDO (AP) — Patrick Mitton is home and happy, a 19-year-old who died for 25 minutes, doctors say.

A shock of 12,000 volts of electricity hit him a week ago today while he worked for a utility company on overhead power lines.

Mitton was guiding a fuse cabinet being lowered by the operator of a boom truck when the boom touched the wires, sending the current through his entire body.

A portion of the charge exited through the truck's tires, blowing out one of them. Mitton was given heart massage immediately by another workman.

"When we arrived, his heart wasn't beating," recalls Duane Hartman, a fireman in nearby San Marcos where the accident took place.

Electric shock was applied. Hartman said, "At first, they weren't getting a heart beat and then, bang! — his heart started beating."

In the eight-mile ride to Tri-City Hospital in Carlsbad, firemen kept Mitton's brain supplied with oxygenated blood, preventing irreversible brain damage, a doctor said later.

Mitton is back in his mobile home, trying to discharge a "kind of shaking" feeling before going back to work.

"I feel pretty lucky," he said in an interview.

"But I'm having problems realizing I died last week."

Rise in major crimes

SACRAMENTO (AP) — A 3.6 per cent rise in major crimes committed in California occurred last year, Atty. Gen. Evelle Younger says.

On Monday the Republican law enforcement officer said that compares with an average annual increase in the seven major offenses of 5.7 per cent between 1971 and 1975.

The murder rate increase was even lower — 0.8 per cent, which compares to an annual average jump of 6.6 per cent from 1971 to 1975.

For the fourth year in a row, thefts of $200 or more showed the biggest percentage increase — 17.6 per cent, while reports of burglary and robbery decreased.

Major crimes covered by Younger's report were murder, rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, theft and motor vehicle theft.

Powers buried at Arlington

WASHINGTON (AP) — Francis Gary Powers, a civilian pilot whose CIA-instigated spy flight over the Soviet Union caused an international incident in 1960, has been laid to rest with military heroes at Arlington National Cemetery.

Some United States critics felt that Powers, who was killed in a California helicopter crash last week, should have committed suicide with a poison needle he carried while on the CIA mission 17 years ago.

Because the 47-year-old Powers was not a military veteran, special authorization was needed for his burial in the cascading hillsides of the cemetery, reserved for military heroes and veterans.

Army Secretary Clifford Alexander said an exception to current rules was made because of Powers' service to his country.

Polanski sentencing next

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Movie director Roman Polanski, who pleaded guilty to unlawful sexual intercourse with a 13-year-old girl, could face up to 50 years in prison or commitment to a state mental hospital and possible deportation from the United States.

Superior Court Judge Laurence J. Rittenband, who accepted Polanski's plea Monday, appointed two psychiatrists to examine the director and report Sept. 19 on whether he is a mentally disordered sex offender.

The dimunitive Polanski, 43, clad in a gray pinstripe suit, stood before the judge and declared, "I had sexual intercourse with a female person not my wife under the age of 18."

Polanski, who won fame with such movies as "Rosemary's Baby" and "Chinatown," told the judge he understood he could receive a sentence of 1 to 50 years in state prison as a result of his plea. The judge, who has discretion in passing sentence, could suspend sentence and place Polanski on probation.

Prosecutors said if Polanski is found to be mentally disordered, he could be committed. Polanski also must talk to probation officers who will file a report before his sentencing.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service said it would wait until sentence is imposed to decide whether to begin deportation proceedings against Polanski, a French citizen of Polish descent who has applied for permanent U.S. residency.

Bus riders could double

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bus ridership would double if Congress would provide funds to reduce rates to 25 cents and double the size of the bus fleet in Los Angeles County, a member of the county Board of Supervisors says.

Kenneth Hahn made his suggestions concerning the Southern California Rapid Transit District at a hearing of the National Transportation Policy Study Commission Monday.

He said if the RTD's 2,200-bus fleet was doubled and fares reduced from 40 cents to a quarter, "We would double the ridership and motivate nearly 1 million more people a day to leave their cars at home and ride public transportation."

RTD spokesman Walt Thompson estimated that Hahn's suggestions would cost $480 million the first year and $300 million annually thereafter.

HSA elections voided

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A Superior Court judge says he is ready to void elections for the powerful county Health Systems Agency because of voting irregularities.

But Judge Robert Weil said Monday he is not certain he has jurisdiction to take that action and barred the newly elected council from conducting business until the issue is cleared up.

A hearing was set for Aug. 16 to determine if the HSA elections fall under Weil's jurisdiction.

"There is no question in my mind that all things require that I cancel the election," Weil said. "I have made the finding that all the allegations (of election irregularities) are true."

The elections were contested in lawsuits filed by the cities of Los Angeles and Torrance.

The suits contend that registration for the election was unfairly restricted, that the public was not adequately notified, and that instructions to voters were incomplete.

Soviet economic development in trouble in '80s?

WASHINGTON (AP) — A probable oil shortage and a decline in the working age population will stunt the Soviet Union's economic development in the 1980s, the CIA is predicting.

In a report entitled "Soviet Economic Problems and Prospects," the CIA concluded that, partly because of an impending scarcity of new oil, the Russians are counting on new supplies of oil and other fuels. But its study noted that these energy resources lie east of the Urals, far from major industrial and population centers.

Because of an imminent economic slowdown, the Soviet Union must make difficult choices, including a decision on whether to cut military expenditures, said the CIA report, which was released Monday by the Joint Economic Committee of Congress.

"Military programs enjoy great momentum and powerful political and bureaucratic support," the CIA said. "We expect defense spending to continue to increase in the next few years at something like recent annual rates of 4 to 5 per cent" because of programs already begun.

"As the economy slows down, however, ways to reduce the growth of defense expenditures could become increasingly pressing for some elements of the Soviet leadership."

The study said that in the next five to 10 years long-standing factors that have retarded the Soviet economy will be aggravated by reduced oil production and a sharp decline in the growth of the working age population.

"In the 1980s the rate of growth of the labor force is expected to drop sharply (to less than 1 per cent beginning in 1982) because of the depressed birth rates of the 1960s," the CIA reported.

But it said the most serious problem is a looming oil shortage, with production beginning to fall off in the late 1970s or early 1980s.

"The current level of oil production is close to the estimated maximum potential of 11 million to 12 million barrels a day," the study said. "By 1985 oil output is likely to fall to between 8 million and 10 million barrels per day."

With opportunities for fuel conservation less obvious in the Soviet Union than in the West, the Russians probably will have to rely on cutting oil exports to Eastern Europe, the CIA said. It said the Soviet Union may have to import substantial amounts of oil from non-communist countries and severely ration oil to domestic users.

"We conclude that a marked reduction in the rate of economic growth in the 1980s seems almost inevitable," concluded the agency's report.

Rep. Richard Bolling, D-Mo., chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, and Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., who heads a subcommittee that asked for the study, called the CIA's conclusions "surprisingly pessimistic with regard to Soviet economic prospects through the next 10 years."

"The CIA forecasts of slow growth, manpower shortages and a hard currency squeeze are of profound significance to Soviet leaders who may have to choose between greater sacrifices on the part of the Soviet consumer or continued military spending at present levels," they said in a joint statement.

Lie detector tests show Ray acted alone

NEW YORK (AP) — Lie detector tests have established that James Earl Ray acted alone in the killing of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Playboy magazine says in its September issue. But the warden at the prison where Ray is being held says the tests were held under false pretenses.

The magazine says in a copyrighted story that it arranged a lie detector test for the convicted killer by John E. Reid and Associates Inc.

Playboy called Reid and Associates "one of the oldest and most respected polygraph-examination firms in the country."

Ray, 49, took the polygraph test in the presence of his lawyer June 22 at Brushy Mountain Penitentiary in Tennessee, where he is serving a 99-year sentence for the murder of Rev. King. Playboy says. The magazine says Ray failed the test when he denied killing the civil rights leader.

Brushy Mountain warden Stoney Lane is quoted in the Boston Globe as saying the interviewers never told authorities of a connection with Playboy magazine. "They sure pulled one on us," he said.

The magazine released the following transcript of the conversation:

Q. "Did you kill Martin Luther King Jr.?"

A. "No."

Q. "Did you fire the shot that killed Martin Luther King Jr.?"

A. "No."

Q. "Do you know for sure who killed Martin Luther King Jr.?"

A. "No."

The polygraph determined Ray was not telling the truth in the above answers, Playboy says, but the machine judged the following answers as truthful:

Q. "Did anyone ask you to kill

Martin Luther King Jr.?"

A. "No."

Q. "Did you arrange with anyone to kill Martin Luther King Jr.?"

A. "No."

Q. "Did anyone give you any money to kill Martin Luther King Jr.?"

A. "No."

Ray pleaded guilty to the April 4, 1968, murder of King. He later attempted to change his plea and has unsuccessfully sought a new trial, attributing the slaying to a mysterious accomplice.

Concerning the June escape, Ray told the magazine he acted alone, although a total of seven inmates escaped.

"Those other guys ... were all on their own," Ray was quoted as saying. "There was no plotting or coercion or anything."

The magazine says interviewers then asked Ray, "Aren't you lying when you say you didn't work with anyone on this escape?"

"No," he replied. "I wouldn't want to go into too many details, but I'm not lying. But I don't want to make any plans for the future with that kind of fear? But that fear is the J. P. Stevens."

Ray also signed up a year ago. Davis said the National Labor Relations Board has cited Stevens for illegally firing 11 workers between August and last November and he said more union supporters had been fired since then.

"Two more of us were fired last week. We all feel like we might be next," he said. "How can you buy anything on time or make any plans for the future with that kind of fear? But that fear is the J. P. Stevens."

Carter defends canal treaty

PLAINS, GA. (AP) — President Carter, encountering criticism of his Panama Canal treaty, thinks it will be "pretty decent" and is asking congressmen to withhold judgment until they see it, his chief spokesman said today.

There have been reports that an announcement of its terms will be made soon.

Some of the reports that negotiators are reaching agreement on the treaty are based on the fact that negotiator Sol Linowitz's term as special ambassador expires Wednesday.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell, accompanying the President on a visit to his home town, said Carter sent messages to all members of the House and Senate telling them the negotiators "are moving along and it looks like we're going to have a pretty decent treaty if things keep going the way they are."

Carter asked the members of Congress "not to get themselves committed on this thing until you have a chance to talk to me," Powell reported.

In Greenwood, Miss., on Monday, Rep. David Bowen, D-Miss., said he did not know what was in the proposed pact, "but on the basis of what I have heard, I don't like the treaty."

Bowen, a member of the House subcommittee on the Panama Canal, said President Carter "sent me a telegram — I presume he sent every member one — asking me to give him a chance to prove his case for the treaty. I will accede to his request."

But Bowen said he believed the administration had done "a lousy job of explaining the situation to the American people. They haven't tried to explain what's going on to the public. We in the Congress have been left in the dark, too."

He said he did not favor putting the canal under Panamanian supervision because of the unstable economic system of Panama.

"They are having severe economic difficulties," he said. "They want it to make money out of it. They want to milk it and they won't make the necessary capital expenditures to keep it up."

"The United States doesn't make money on it. It is a break-even operation for us. You can't make money out of it and make it serve its intended purposes."

In Columbia, S.C., Republican Sen. Strom Thurmond also rejected Carter's request for forbearance, telling a luncheon Monday after he received the Carter telegram, "The canal is ours, and we bought and we paid for it and we should keep it."

Powell said Carter wants to go over the treaty personally "word for word and line by line" once agreement is reached among the negotiators.

Then, Powell said, the President wants his cabinet and National Security Council to review the treaty in its entirety.

Workers fear for their jobs

ROANOKE RAPIDS, N.C. (AP) — Workers at J. P. Stevens textile plants described dramatically today their fears of being fired and blacklisted from other jobs in the South as a result of their attempts to form a union at Stevens plants.

Louise Bailey, who has been a cotton spinner for 36 years at the Montgomery, Ala., plant now owned by Stevens, and Jerry Davis, who started working seven years ago at the plant when he was 17, testified at the opening of House labor subcommittee hearings on proposals to penalize employers who repeatedly violate labor laws.

"For 36 years I've been a spinner in that cotton mill. I have a good record. Now I'm scared every day in my gut when I go in," Mrs. Bailey said.

"I feel guilty because these other people have been laid off, because I am an experienced worker and because they looked to me. I don't know from one day to another when I'll have a job," she said.

Mrs. Bailey had helped organize the union at the plant in 1946 when it closed down for three months and then reopened with only the non-union workers. Four years later, after searching fruitlessly for other work, she was reinstated by the courts on her job "but we got only the worst jobs in the mill. They never let you forget that you had tried to organize the union," she said.

A year ago, she said, she signed a union card again to try and get the textile union organized at the Stevens cotton and synthetic yarn mill plant at Montgomery.

Davis also signed up a year ago. Davis said the National Labor Relations Board has cited Stevens for illegally firing 11 workers between August and last November and he said more union supporters had been fired since then.

"Two more of us were fired last week. We all feel like we might be next," he said. "How can you buy anything on time or make any plans for the future with that kind of fear? But that fear is the J. P. Stevens."

Stevens has acknowledged that it opposes unions in its plants, but denies that it fires workers who favor unionization or that it is refusing to negotiate seriously on an initial contract with the textile union.

Son of Sam T-shirts sold

NEW YORK (AP) — The mysterious killer who calls himself "Son of Sam" in letters to officials and newspapers has been on the minds of many New Yorkers, including some entrepreneurs. Trying to cash in on the killer's notoriety, they've begun selling "Son of Sam" T-shirts.

The white T-shirts with black lettering were on sale in Central Park Monday night to passersby headed to a nearby concert.

The shirts feature the crude police composite sketch of the 44-caliber killer, who has killed six persons and wounded seven others in little more than a year. Surrounding the sketch are the words, "Son of Sam — Get him before he gets you."

NO HELP FROM FIREMEN

Neighbors and friends of residents managed to save a few things as a fire destroyed one home and damaged another in Dayton, Ohio, Monday night.

Striking firemen picketed at a fire station just three blocks away, refusing to come to their aid.

Striking firemen ignore fires

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — Fires broke out in two abandoned apartment houses today and spread to at least one occupied dwelling while striking firemen picketed three blocks away and refused to help douse the flames.

The first blaze, which gutted the apartment building, also severely damaged an adjacent two-story frame house occupied by two families. No injuries were reported. Firemen from the neighboring community of Madison Township responded to a call for help but were too late to keep the house from being engulfed.

The second fire was burning uncontrolled, and residents of nearby homes were trying to remove their belongings for fear it would spread.

An occupant of the frame house, Bob Jackson, said Dayton firemen punched a hole in the wall, then told residents they would have to fight the fire themselves.

More than 370 Dayton firemen said when they walked off the job Monday that they would respond only in life-or-death situations. Their action left this city of 241,000 without fire protection for the first time in history and with limited ambulance service.

Some policemen were expected to stay off the job today in support of the strike in sympathy with demands by Fire Fighters Local 136 for higher wages and a shorter work week.

The added prospect of diminished police protection had city officials, businesses and residents preparing for possible duty as supplemental safety forces.

Negotiators met until early today trying unsuccessfully to rewrite a contract for firemen to replace one that expired Feb. 28.

Judge William Wolff Jr. of the Montgomery County Common Pleas Court ordered the firemen back to their posts six hours after their work stoppage began, but none of the firemen returned.

Key issues in the strike are wages and working hours. Fire fighters start at $12,043 a year, and the union is seeking a 6 per cent increase. The city has offered a 2.65 per cent wage increase. Fire fighters also want their work week reduced from 52 to 48 hours.

City Manager James Alloway called the strike "unconscionable" because half the firemen live outside the city and said the city cannot afford the $6.25 million it would cost to hire extra firemen over the next five years to reduce the work week.

Meanwhile, suburban firefighting companies have been told to stand by to assist Dayton's remaining fire-fighting force, and private ambulance companies were being sent to emergencies usually covered by firemen.

Row ends in gun death; man arrested

An argument between two men in a Valinda home Monday night ended with the death of one and the arrest of the other on a murder charge. Industry sheriff's deputies reported this morning.

Steven Montes, 19, 609 N. California Ave., La Puente, died at 3 a.m. today at County-USC Medical Center of a single gunshot wound in the head. He had been transferred there from Queen of the Valley Hospital, West Covina.

In custody at Industry sheriff's sub-station in connection with the shooting was Johnny Pinto, 18, 611 Roxley Ave., Valinda.

Deputies said the shooting occurred at 8:05 p.m. at the Roxley Avenue home. They recovered a .22-caliber weapon.

Cause of the argument was unknown.

Ontario woman, 73, hit by car

A 73-year-old Ontario woman was seriously injured Monday afternoon when she was struck by a car on Euclid Avenue north of D Street in Ontario, police reported.

The pedestrian, Patrocinio Young of 212 E. State St., was listed in stable condition this morning at Ontario Community Hospital with multiple injuries suffered in the accident.

Ontario police said the elderly woman was struck by a car driven by Irene May Bower, 17, of 1847 N. Amador St., Ontario.

later, he flew the Bock's Car, which dropped a plutonium bomb on Nagasaki.

"Everything had an aura of excitement and tension," Sweeney, 57, said of the missions in a recent interview.

"There were so many checks that had to be made and so many ways they could fail."

"The weather was beautiful (on Aug. 6). We made the run on Hiroshima at 30,000 feet, and we could see very clearly," he recalled.

"We were 12 miles away when it exploded, but the shock waves came up and hit the plane severely."

There were complications Aug. 9, the day Nagasaki was bombed, and fuel problems prevented Sweeney from returning to his base at Tinian Island in the western Pacific after the mission. He landed at Okinawa instead.

"Our original target on the second mission was Kohura," he said.

"I made four runs over the city, but I couldn't get a clear view ..."

"We had anti-aircraft fire, and Japanese Zeros were climbing up toward us, but they didn't get to our altitude when I made the decision to go to Nagasaki."

Revenge seen as killing motive

GASTON, Ore. (AP) — A young woman who twice gave evidence in cases involving members of the Hell's Angels motorcycle club may have been murdered for revenge, says a Washington County sheriff's official.

The body of Margo Compton, 25, her 6-year-old twin daughters, Sylvia and Sandra, and Gary Seslar, 19, a visiting Coast Guardsman, were found Sunday in an isolated house in farm country southwest of Portland. Each had been shot through the head.

"The homicides appear to be gangland type execution slayings," said Sheriff's Lt. John Vallery.

In 1968, Zone 17 of the Pacific Southwest District of Optimist International presented him its Optimist of the Year Award.

He was a former member of the Pomona Elks Lodge, a member of the Ups and Downers, the American Bowling Congress, and an honorary brother of the Nez Perce Indian tribe in Washington. He also worked with the Indian Fair at the Los Angeles County Fair. He was a commercial artist for 20 years.

Housewife arrested as deserter

LOVES PARK, Ill. (AP) — Collette Carter, who took an Army oath two years ago but never served in the military, found out that Uncle Sam still wanted her when military police showed up at her home with arrest warrants.

Mrs. Carter was taken into custody Monday by police bearing warrants for desertion and being absent without leave. She was being held at the Ft. Sheridan Army base, north of Chicago.

"They said they were taking me here to process the papers and send me back home," she said from Ft. Sheridan. "They said they'd send me back home on a plane and I'd be back in Loves Park for dinner tomorrow (Tuesday)."

According to her husband, Herbert, Mrs. Carter had signed up at an Army recruitment center in Minneapolis in 1975 with intentions of becoming a chaplain's assistant. She enlisted under a Delayed Entry Program which allows enlistees several months before reporting for duty, he added.

"Then she married me and that changed her mind about being in the Army," Carter said. "I guess she thought it sounded like a good idea at the time."

Carter said an FBI agent came to their home in this north-central Illinois town west of Chicago a few months ago, but promised the charges would be taken care of shortly after.

"When he found out she was married and had a five-month-old child, the agent said he would send in a report and that she would be discharged," Carter explained.

Nothing was heard from either the FBI or Army in the next few months, he added. Until Monday.

"My wife called me at the shop and told me I had better get home quick," said Carter.

Carter said he was greeted at home by his wife and military police.

"They acted real nice," Carter said. "They read her her rights and said they were just taking her to get her discharge and clear it off her record."

Both Carter and wife said it was their understanding that the charges would not be pressed. But when contacted Monday night, a military police spokesman declined comment on the status of the charges.

"I never really thought I was in the Army," Mrs. Carter said. "I thought with delayed entry you take an initial oath and then you take another one right before you report. I never took the second oath. All I know is that I wish I had never even started to enlist."

Tells of atrocities by Amin

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP)

— A 25-year-old medical student who says he spent 14 months in Ugandan prisons asks that the world be told about "the horrors" of his homeland, where he says President Idi Amin routinely orders mass executions and torture of prison inmates.

John Sekabira said he was tortured, helped bury the mangled victims of mass executions, and once watched Amin dance after inspecting the grave of massacred soldiers.

Sekabira, who said he fled to Kenya after being released in June, told The Associated Press in an interview that his own ordeal was "mild" compared with those suffered by other inmates.

"The world must know about the horrors of Uganda," he told The Associated Press in an interview. "Perhaps that way they may be inspired to do something about it."

Sekabira said he witnessed the burial of an elderly white woman on July 20, 1976. The date indicates she may have been Dora Bloch, the British-Israeli grandmother who was left behind when Israeli commandos staged their famous raid on Entebbe.

Mrs. Bloch, one of the hostages being held by hijackers of an Air France jetliner, had been taken to a Kampala hospital. Hospital staff members have reported previously that she was murdered by Amin's security police.

John Davidson back on stage; won't talk about fire disaster

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Singer John Davidson has returned to the stage for the first time since his appearance at a Kentucky supper club where a fire killed 164 persons. But he refuses to discuss the disaster and walked out of a recent interview when the subject came up.

Davidson appears confident and relaxed on stage here. In a backstage interview, however, the popular performer's open, laughing stage manner turned to tight-lipped annoyance when a reporter casually asked how his life had been affected by the May 28 blaze at the Beverly Hills Supper Club in South Gate, Ky.

"I just would rather not even mention the fire, because I just don't want to talk about the fire," he said. "So many people lost their lives in it. It was a great tragedy. There's no reason to rake it over. Everybody's talked about the fire. It's all over. I don't want to talk about the fire."

Joyce Brothers

It's decidophobia

DEAR DR. JOYCE BROTHERS: In my family our father was the law and neither my mother nor we children had a chance to make decisions on our own. I believe this is why I feel so insecure today. I go into a panic whenever I have to make a choice. This is a big problem now that I'm planning my wedding. It's driving me crazy, not just the big decision of marriage itself, but all the other things, such as where to have the reception, whom to invite, what to serve, and so on. — J.B.

DEAR DR. JOYCE BROTHERS: One of the great dangers of the authoritarian family is exactly the one you point out. Within a family decisions should be made jointly so that the children have an opportunity to experience how they are reached and what factors should be considered and weighed. They should also learn through sharing decision-making that errors aren't always fatal.

Princeton philosopher Walter Kaufmann says that the fear of making fateful decisions is nearly universal. He calls it "decidophobia." The decidophobe restricts himself by making one of ten major choices which automatically eliminates the need for making future decisions.

The most common choice is marriage. Many women marry primarily to avoid fateful decisions in the future. They decide that they'll leave all that up to their husbands. Men, too, may marry so they can avoid the lone decision. If something goes wrong, they'll have someone to share the blame with.

Before you walk down the aisle, make sure you're not getting married just as an escape. The only way to overcome your phobia is to practice making decisions and to realize, before you do, that you don't have to be perfect. It might be a good idea to deliberately make some wrong choices, so that you'll see they're not necessarily disastrous.

DEAR DR. JOYCE BROTHERS: I hate going to parties because whenever I get in a group, I have a terrible time talking. I just get tense and clam up. I often have to go to parties with another secretary from my office and my boss always gets chummy and touches me more than I like. This makes me even more tense and I practically stutter. Any suggestions? — R.A.

DEAR R.A.: Practice helps. Find someone else who is just as shy as you are, set goals for what you want to accomplish in a specific social situation and then do a test-run with each other.

When you go to a party, don't go empty headed, as it were, but prepare by thinking of some topics of conversation that might be of interest. Once you launch in, listen carefully to the response. This seems obvious, but studies have shown that many reticent people have trouble listening as well as communicating. Most of this is a result of a bad case of nerves that blocks concentration.

Try to remember when you're in any social situation that others are just as shy as you are and if they're talking, they're making an effort to leap over their fears and timidity.

Gerald Phillips and Nancy Metzger of Pennsylvania State University observed people who became tongue-tied in social situations and discovered they often tended to overestimate their own importance and to think others should be the ones to make the first move. They rarely beamed cues that might let others know what they'd like to talk about.

As for your fondling, touching boss. Touch can mean a lot of different things and it's impossible to guess just what he means without knowing more about him. He may be trying to show that he likes you, he may be making a pass, or he may just be a warm, open, friendly type who touches both men and women. Ask him or touch him back — this may give you the answer.

Search for robber continues

Upland police Monday were searching for a man wearing a red bandana over his face who robbed the Circle K Market at 1111 E. Ninth St. in Upland of a small amount of cash Sunday night.

Police said the man entered the store about 9 p.m. and pointed a .22 caliber rifle with a chrome barrel at the woman clerk demanding the cash from the register. The clerk complied and the robber fled with the cash.

The robber was further described as being a Latin, 5 feet 8 to 5 feet 11, of husky build, and wearing a green watch cap, beige shirt and grey khaki pants.

NEW MONKEY BARS — The Child Care Center located on the Pomona High School campus recently received new playground and picnic equipment from students in the Baldy View Regional Occupational Program (ROP) in child care.

The vocational training program for high school students is operated by the Pomona Unified School District in conjunction with the ROP. The new equipment will be ready for new students this fall at the Pomona campus.

NEW LIGHT SYSTEM — Jay Doty (right), director of the Claremont Colleges Center for the Performing Arts, demonstrates a new lighting panel in Bridges Auditorium to Mr. and Mrs. Craig McManigal who headed the Pomona Valley portion of the $1.5 million campaign to restore the auditorium. The panel is in the back of the hall where the operator can see the effects he controls. The disks Doty holds carry light cues which are fed into a computer. The auditorium is scheduled to reopen to the public Oct. 22.

Claremont school budget approved, tax rate up 57 cents

The Claremont school board has approved a $13,366,507 budget containing a $99,000 reduction in funds over last year's program of service. Despite the reduction — which comes as a result of a drop in state aid to the district — the board approved with the budget a $6.42 property tax rate, up three cents from the publication budget presented a month ago and up 57 cents over last year's $5.85 rate.

Two years ago, the board had reduced rates by $1 at the time the district was reassessed.

The owner of a $40,000 house in the district will pay $642 in property taxes to the district next year.

The new budget contains funds for upgrading district library collections and contingencies which business manager Charles Abbott estimates will be reduced by $120,000 when the district reaches an agreement with the California School Employees Association on a contract for the new school year. The district and the CSEA have declared an impasse in their negotiations. Reserves will then be reduced to the $997,459 level.

The budget represents deficit financing on the part of the district with expenditures exceeding revenue by $658,575.

New programs not included in Bonita school budget

A $13,760,750 Bonita school budget has been approved by the district's board of education.

While providing no new funding for new programs or facilities next year, the budget is aimed at "keeping things level," said James Overin, district assistant superintendent for business.

Overin noted that the 1977-78 program of service was limited by the district's revenue limit, the Collier factor and the number of redevelopment agencies — from which the district receives no tax support — in the district.

The budget will be financed through a district tax rate set at $5.36, up 23 cents from last year but still down 27 cents over the rate of two years ago. The owner of a $40,000 home in the district will pay $536 to the district in property taxes this year.

The Collier factor, a state formula for determining aid to school districts, resulted in an 8 per cent drop in state aid to the district this year causing the increased tax rate. Before the Collier factor had been considered, the board had approved a $5.07 publication tax rate. Overin also noted that while state aid declines, the district's assessed valuation has climbed by 25 per cent this year after having increased by 27 per cent last year.

Robert E. Lee

Robert E. Lee served as superintendent of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point from 1852 to 1855.

While the Collier factor may impact the district this year, there has been talk in other districts that the Legislature may introduce emergency legislation to stop the Collier factor action in Los Angeles County school districts.

Per pupil expenditures this year, said Overin, will amount to $1,256.77 per child.

Pomona motorist wounded

West End sheriff's deputies this morning are seeking to learn the motive of three men in a car who shot another motorist in the back early Sunday morning at Ramona Avenue and Mission Boulevard near Montclair.

The motorist was treated for a gunshot wound at Park Avenue Hospital in Pomona shortly after the 4:30 a.m. incident. He was later released from the hospital.

The victim told deputies three men drove up beside his car on Ramona Avenue. He said the driver pointed a handgun at him and he stopped his vehicle. The victim said he started to leave the vehicle when four shots were fired at him. One hit him in the upper back.

He was only able to describe his assailants as whites in a 1964 or 1965 Valiant, raised in the rear.

Expecting 800 students

Claremont Men's College prepared for new year

Claremont Men's College will open the 1977-78 academic year with about 800 students, 12 new faculty and three new administrators.

Now in residence at Bauer Center are Colin Wright, new dean of faculty; Jerome Garris, the dean of students, and Martha Taschereau, the college's director of public relations.

A new center for the study of law structures will be in effect this fall, under the direction of William Craig Stubblebine, professor of economics. The law and economics program offers economics, political science, and pre-law scholars every opportunity to keep abreast of the constant rapid change and recasting of the laws. Another program, now beginning its third year, has been so successful it will be expanding. It is a tutorial program, allowing selected students an opportunity to have individual instruction in some courses. The college has nine tutors on its instructional staff.

There are 122 women enrolled the first semester of the college's second coeducational year.

Jack L. Stark is the college's president.

Ontario market robbed

A man armed with a butcher knife robbed the Stop and Go Market at 311 N. Mountain Avenue in Ontario of a small amount of cash Sunday night, said Ontario police.

Police said the man entered the store about 10 p.m. and confronted the woman clerk with a large butcher knife. The clerk handed him the cash from the register and he fled out the door.

You don't like the shape America's in? O.K. change it.

America's got too many poor people, right? And there's plenty of other problems too. Take our cities. The shape of some of them is enough to make you cry. And waste and ignorance, the cycle of poverty that traps one generation after another because they're too busy just holding on to get ahead. The ravages of hunger and disease. Education that's either too little or none. Skills that are lacking, and the means to get them also. It could go on and on, and it will unless you do something. And not the you standing behind you either, but you. You believe something can be done.

O.K. now's the time for action... join VISTA: Volunteers in Service to America. If you're eighteen or eighty—great, we want you. We want you to organize in your community, or someone else's. Helping miners in Appalachia learn a new skill. Or migrant farm workers' children to read. We want you to organize a clinic in Watts. Or fight poverty around the corner. We don't care how much you make now, only how much you can give now. We're greedy in VISTA; we want all you've got.

S.B. supervisors' pay raise issue up again

Taxpayer group opposes board's action on salary

By BOB SWETNAM
PB Staff Writer

San Bernardino County supervisors formally adopted an 8 per cent pay raise for themselves Monday and in the process raised the ire of a taxpayer group that has opposed them.

Pay raises for supervisors — an issue thought to be dead for this year following the board's unanimous approval of pay raises last week — emerged again as a controversial item when a representative of the Citizens for Better Government contested the concept of supervisors setting their own salaries.

Supervisors were set to approve the routine item, formally raising their salaries from $22,988 to $24,844 annually when a spokesman for the taxpayer group asked the board to postpone decision on the matter until it could be voted on by a full five-member board. Supervisors Dennis Hansberger and Bob Hammock were absent Monday.

"We, the constituents of San Bernardino County demand that the voters of the county be the ones to set supervisors salaries," said Ana Mae Frielung, a frequent critic of supervisors' salaries.

"We demand the item (of salaries) be taken off the agenda and postponed until all supervisors are present."

The board declined to comply with Mrs. Frielung's request and opted instead to unanimously approve the formal salary ordinance.

Citizens have protested the issue of supervisors setting their own salaries since last year when the board voted themselves a 3.4 per cent, $8,500 annual pay increase. Public pressure following that move was so strong that the supervisors were forced to rescind the action.

This year, however, the board had sought a more modest 8 per cent increase. They left the door open on additional 5 per cent cost-of-living raise they will vote on in January.

Citizens groups, however, appear to be upset not over the amount of money supervisors should be paid but over who should decide it — the voters or the supervisors themselves.

Several times this year, board members have stated they do not like the idea of setting their own salaries but that state law requires them to do so. Citizen groups, however, have maintained supervisors can give voters the right to choose salaries by simply amending the county charter, which supervisors have refused to do.

Hoping to avoid controversy such as occurred during last year's salary hearings, the board had earlier in the year asked the county Grand Jury to recommend pay raises this year. The 8 per cent pay raise and consideration of an additional 5 per cent in January were the result of those recommendations.

Taxpayers' resentment to the Grand Jury report, however, began to build shortly after its release. Five public hearings on the issue were held before supervisors voted on the matter.

Supervisor Bob Hammock of San Bernardino, who had run for re-election on a platform opposed to supervisors setting their own salaries had been absent during last week's and Monday's vote. He sent a memo, however, in support of an 8 per cent salary increase for supervisors. Other supervisors voted unanimously to take the 8 per cent raise and postpone action on the additional 5 per cent.

Supervisors Robert Townsend of Chino and Joseph Kaminsky of Upland supported the pay raise. Townsend had opposed the huge pay raise last year. Kaminsky is a recent appointee to the board.

City hall employees picket

By ED PRATHER
PB Staff Writer

City hall employees, angry that their association has been unsuccessful in securing a new contract, demonstrated their frustration Monday by picketing outside the Pomona Council Chambers.

The picket line formed shortly after 4 p.m. Monday and dozens of off-duty employees continued to walk through the start of the Pomona City Council meeting at 8 p.m.

Bill Paine, a spokesman for the Pomona City Employees Association, told the City Council that employees "want and deserve" a significant pay raise and that they are fed up with the administration's "take away attitude."

"We took crumbs last year. We can't take crumbs again this year," said Paine.

He accused the city of caring only for policemen and firemen, while the miscellaneous employees see their numbers reduced and workloads multiply.

The city has offered the employees a three-year wage package that is worth about 22 per cent, according to City Administrator Jerry Gonce.

Paine contended that the proposal is really only worth 15 per cent, 5 per cent each year, with the provision that the employees withdraw from the Social Security system.

Many of the employees carried picket signs stating their wishes to remain in the Social Security system.

Paine said many employees feel withdrawal from Social Security would threaten the future security of the employees' wives, husbands and children.

The city staff has scheduled a special meeting for next Monday to attempt explaining the alternatives to the Social Security system.

Pomona City Hall employees picketed in the civic center plaza Monday afternoon and evening, demanding a settlement of their wage dispute with the city.

There appears to be no opposition to the relocation of two girls' softball diamonds in Upland's Greenbelt Park, so developers hope to start construction this week.

The fate of a third ball diamond, for Little League, is still in limbo.

A special Upland City Council meeting Monday to hear from residents along 15th Street north of the park drew no protests.

The meeting didn't even produce a quorum of councilmen so that any official action could be taken.

Previously approved plans for the park, developed by the Recreation Committee over the past two years, drew protests from owners of Cable Airport when it was revealed that lightpoles for the three fields might extend into the landing pattern of the airport which is located west of the park about one-half mile.

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) has approved the installation of the poles, based upon maps submitted to their office. Now, some FAA officials question the wisdom of placing the poles in the area.

Steve Bodnar, spokesman for the Hilltoppers Girls' Softball League, said Monday that he will sign a contract this week with Inland Manpower Association for the beginning of field construction.

"If I wait any longer, we'll lose $50,000 in labor," Bodnar explained. "We can assume that the residents in the area are aware of the concerns we have taken to protect them from any light or noise factors."

Bodnar said the fields will be lowered below the street level, the lights will be lowered and shielded and no play will extend beyond 10:30 p.m.

Dewey Cable, president of Cable Airport, said that moving the two fields 200 feet to the north "would be a great help for pilots." He said he "could live with" the new design of the fields.

City Manager Lee Travers said staff and Little League representatives have been meeting and "it's a possibility that the Little Leaguers may be moved to Pioneer Park." That decision may be made at next Monday's council meeting, he added.

Present at the Monday council meeting were Councilman John McCarthy and Councilwoman Ina Petokas. Mayor George Gibson and Councilman Hal Bailin were in Sacramento and Councilman William Bottin announced at 6 p.m. that he would be unable to attend.

S.B. employee group gains pay increase

San Bernardino County supervisors approved a new three-year agreement with the San Bernardino Public Employees Association Monday that will mean an average 18 per cent pay raise for 6,336 employees.

The new contract calls for an average 15 per cent increase in salaries during the next three years and an immediate 3 per cent increase to bring county employees salaries in line with those paid similar employees in other counties.

In addition, improvements in existing health and dental plans will be made, a life insurance program will be started, and changes will be made in overtime compensation.

Brea woman dies in crash

A 21-year-old Brea woman was killed Monday night when her car left Brea Canyon Road near the Orange County line and crashed into a dirt embankment, according to the California Highway Patrol.

The driver, France Marie Secret, of 160 Green Tree Lane, Apt. 2, Brea, was pronounced dead at the scene.

Highway patrolmen said the woman's car, southbound on Brea Canyon Road, left the roadway for unknown reasons, smashed into a dirt embankment and overturned. Officers said the woman was ejected from the vehicle upon impact.

The accident is under investigation.

asked the school board last April to establish legal smoking areas. However, the board postponed action on the matter until results of the parent attitude survey were available.

Under a state law effective in January, 1976, school boards are given the option of establishing designated smoking areas at high schools.

The results of the parent survey differ from opinions voiced by students and teachers at Chino High, who favored the smoking areas by a strong 72 per cent. The survey of students and teachers was presented to the school board by student body officers.

Trustees were presented the parent attitude survey results last week by Supt. Duane Stiff. They expressed interest in resolving the smoking issue soon, but took no action.

tion relating to it.

Overall results of the parent survey show about 75 per cent of the respondents are "generally satisfied" with the school system.

Parents at the elementary level were more pleased with the system and their child's performance than those at the upper levels. Parents were more pleased with discipline efforts at the elementary schools than at the junior high and high schools.

In fact, at the high school level, more parents (39 per cent) felt student discipline was not being handled properly while 38 per cent felt it was.

On the year-round school (YRS) issue, 83 per cent of the parents whose children are enrolled in the plan in elementary school were satisfied with it. Nine per cent were not satisfied. At the junior high level, 77 per cent were satisfied, while 9 per cent were not.

Forty-seven per cent of parents of elementary school youngsters felt YRS should be offered at the high school level, but 29 per cent disagreed. (YRS is not presently being offered in the high schools.)

Parents at the junior highs favored YRS at the high school level by a slim margin, 41 to 39 per cent; and high school parents opposed YRS by a 39 to 38 per cent vote.

The annual survey was conducted by Applied Technology Center of Anaheim, which sent out questionnaires to 2,119 "randomly selected" families during May and June. Ninety-four per cent of the questionnaires were returned.

No decision made on apartment house

Homeowners in two cities protested plans for a new Pomona apartment house Monday and the Pomona City Council found itself unable to make a decision on the project.

Homeowners from the neighborhoods off Sumner Avenue north of Foothill Boulevard, some in Pomona and some in Claremont, told the City Council that an apartment house in their area would deteriorate property values.

John Rinset, a resident of 1259 Reims St. in Claremont, told the council that congestion, crime and parking problems would all result if the apartment house is allowed to be built.

At issue is a proposed 36-unit apartment complex just behind the recently built Bob's Restaurant at the corner of Sumner and Foothill.

The land, 1.8 acres, is currently zoned for single family residential use and commercial use. The applicant, Frank T. Howard, was seeking a zone change to multiple residential use.

Pomona Planning Commission has approved the project, stating that Howard's project is a quality development that would serve as a buffer between the restaurant and commercial activities on Foothill and the homes on the north.

Homeowners, however, don't see it that way.

They complained traffic is already heavy on Sumner and will get worse, and they fear allowing the apartment house to be built would set a precedent that might open the door to more apartment construction nearby.

No apartments, they said, currently exist north of Foothill Boulevard.

Faced with a choice between angry homeowners and a property owner seeking to develop what the staff believes is a good project, the council split its vote 2-2.

Sacco and Vanzetti

For fully half a century, the names Sacco and Vanzetti have been a rallying cry to dissenters and a reproach to the nation's conscience.

It will never be known — certainly it will never be proved to the satisfaction of all — whether or not Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti were guilty of the crime for which they were executed in 1927, the murder of two men during a payroll robbery in South Braintree, Mass.

But it has become increasingly clear with the passage of years that these two Italian immigrants and self-proclaimed anarchists did not receive a fair trial. In that decade between the Great War and the Great Depression, ethnic, racial and political intolerance were at high pitch in America and fear of the "red menace" was very real.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts has now formally admitted as much in a proclamation signed by Gov. Michael Dukakis, conceding the "very real possibility that a grievous miscarriage of justice occurred with their deaths" and declaring that "any stigma or disgrace should be forever removed" from their names.

While no proclamation can completely remove the stain from this page of American history, Massachusetts' overdue action is a sign of this country's heightening sense of justice.

Suffer the little children

Abortion and adoption would seem to be two quite different subjects. The two are inevitably going to be linked together, however, when Congress takes up a Carter administration plan for reform of the child welfare system.

Along with general expansion of federal services in this field, the proposal calls for families to be paid to adopt otherwise unadoptable children — older children, physically or mentally handicapped children, minority children.

At present, the federal government spends about $1,000 a child a year to help support 117,000 children in foster care — about a third of the 350,000 children the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) estimates are in foster homes or institutions.

But if a child is adopted by his foster parents, all payments stop.

This is not only unjust. It is, HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. told a Senate subcommittee, a "viciously antifamily" system.

Under the proposed reform the government would pay something like $2,000 annually to families willing to adopt hard-to-place children. Payments would continue until a child reached 18, provided the family's income stayed below a certain level.

But with President Carter under pressure to offer some alternative to the abortion he opposes, Califano assured that the administration also wished to guarantee the medical expenses of pregnant women who agreed to give their babies up for adoption.

By all means, adoption of children who would otherwise spend their entire childhoods in foster care should be encouraged — provided there were safeguards to prevent creation of a new welfare ripoff racket.

But the administration's plan also seems to encourage the production of tens of thousands of new orphans, new wards of the states and the United States. The taxpayers deserve to be told a little more about what the President has in mind for their futures — and how much it would cost.

Think on these things

Isn't it enough that we make errors without adding to the difficulty with self criticism? It's a cinch that if we are doing anything at all we will make mistakes once in a while — particularly if we're trying not to. But to demean oneself is even worse than having someone else do it. When someone else criticizes us, we can stand our ground and tell them to get lost — but who will protect us from us?

Goethe once said that he saw no fault committed that he himself could not have committed at some time or other. It works the other way around, too. We would be hard put to find a fault in ourselves that no one else had ever experienced. We would be as wrong not to see the error — but correct it from that point instead of making it harder to handle by plunging further into self doubt.

Pomona's 'quiet lady artist'

Dear Editor:

For the past two years I have been doing biographical research on the American artist and Pomona resident, Alice Blair Ring (1869-1947). During this time I have collected historical information about Miss Ring and I have located more than a dozen of her paintings, most of them in the Pomona area. In addition, I have contacted several of her relatives who have photographs of the artist and of her studio in Pomona.

A. B. Ring graduated from Oberlin College in 1890 with a degree in art. After graduation she continued her art studies in New York City at the Art Students League. She then spent about 10 years in Europe, painting and studying with some very distinguished artists such as Melchers, Hitchcock, and Laurens. Most of her important works were done between 1895 and 1930. Miss Ring's paintings treat a wide variety of subjects and she was a master in the use of color in the style of the impressionists. The overall composition of her paintings provide the viewer an intimate and memorable feeling toward the themes she depicts.

Miss Ring's paintings were exhibited at various prestigious exhibits including the Paris Salon, the Art Institute of Chicago, the 1915 Panama Pacific Exposition in San Francisco and the 1933 World's Fair in Chicago. She is cited in several art reference works.

Alice Blair Ring came to Pomona in 1912 and remained until her death in 1947. She bequeathed her house to Pilgrim Congregational Church, proceeds from which allowed the construction of the Ring Patio of the church.

I became interested in Miss Ring when I saw several of her paintings. My husband is a former resident of Pomona and we visit Pomona often as we have relatives who live there. This closeness we have for Pomona and the deep impression Miss Ring's beautiful works have made on us prompted me to find out more about the quiet lady artist who used to live on Pasadena Street. Except for the brief citations in the art reference books there is little written material about her, hence my activities in conducting this research.

Alcohol could fill fuel needs

WASHINGTON — A grim President Carter told the American people on April 18 that they should brace for the equivalent of war to overcome the energy shortage. He called for smaller cars, better insulation and simpler lifestyles.

Last week, the Senate Energy Committee responded dramatically by outlawing automobiles that get less than 16 miles per gallon, beginning with the 1980 models.

Some energy experts have told us Americans may not have to change their way of life. It may not be necessary for them to junk their big cars, give up their weekend drives to the beach and move back into the city from the outlying communities.

Before the nation runs out of gas, say these experts, much of the fuel that is needed can be distilled from agricultural surpluses, timber waste, municipal garbage, wastepaper and coal.

These plentiful products can be converted into alcohol fuels, which can be blended into gasoline without even changing the engines. In fact, with slight modifications, automobile engines can be adjusted to run entirely on alcohol.

Already, Brazil and Germany have made commitments to start the switch to alcohol fuels. Brazil is seriously considering a plan to draw 75 per cent of its liquid fuel from alcohol by the year 2000.

Neither the idea nor the technology is new. European producers have sold alcohol blended with gasoline for decades. In the 1930s, Chrysler Motors modified some cars slightly to accommodate alcohol fuels and shipped them to oil-short New Zealand.

International Harvester used to advertise in the Philippines that its motor trucks were "powered with engines especially designed to burn alcohol." Today, many race car drivers prefer alcohol fuels to gasoline.

We have spent several weeks investigating the dramatic possibility that alcohol could end our immediate dependence upon overseas oil. Alcohol fuels don't have to be pumped out of foreign fields but can be produced right here in the United States. This would stimulate the U.S. economy and reduce the massive flow of dollars to the oil potentates.

For the amount it will cost to transport Middle East oil across the ocean and store it in our strategic reserves, experts insist, the government could build dozens of alcohol fuel plants throughout the nation.

These plants are far cheaper to construct than gasoline refineries. They can also utilize waste products, thus producing vital fuel and cleaning up America at the same time. Experts told us, for example, that most of the garbage and trash New York City now dumps into the ocean could be transformed into alcohol fuels. The benefit to the beaches, which are now awash with pollution, would be worth the cost of the project, one authority suggested.

Speaking of pollution, the use of alcohol fuels would reduce the noxious exhaust fumes that now choke our cities. Comprehensive studies by Volkswagen, General Motors and even Exxon indicate that pure alcohol fuels cut down dramatically on auto pollution.

Yet the Carter administration, despite the high stakes involved, has failed to pay much attention to alcohol fuels. The 103-page National Energy Program devotes only a single sentence to the alcohol potential.

The Energy Research and Development Administration has devoted a few dollars to alcohol fuel research. The experiments have yielded promising results but, strangely, have been virtually ignored by higher-ups.

The all-powerful oil industry, of course, opposes developing rival alcohol fuels. This not only would threaten oil profits but could break the industry's monopoly. A city government could produce fuel from its garbage, a timber state from its wastewood, a farm state from its surplus grain. Then the big oil companies might be left with a lot of unused crude on their hands.

The oil operators, for example, have quietly tried to block the state of Nebraska from producing and marketing a 10 per cent blend of grain alcohol and gasoline. This product, known by the nickname "gas-o-hol," could be used in existing engines.

Suddenly, Nebraska congressmen began receiving quiet calls from representatives of the Nebraska Petroleum Marketers, urging them to oppose the gas-o-hol project. They coolly predicted that Nebraska's Gov. James Exon would withdraw his previous support of the project.

The governor denied he was opposed to gas-o-hol, but he called for further study. This was interpreted inside the statehouse as a political stall. Disillusioned legislators are convinced he caved in to oil pressure, a charge he vigorously denies.

Alcohol blends would cost a few cents per gallon more than gasoline, at the current prices. But insiders expect that gas prices not only will catch up but surpass what it would cost to produce alcohol fuels.

The benefits in reducing pollution, improving the economy and reducing the dependence on oil imports should also be cranked into the economics. Favorable tax incentives could help make alcohol fuels competitive.

The night of the animals

They're calling it "the night of the animals" — New York City's billion-dollar blackout and orgy of related looting.

When normally the mostly liberal media is inclined to apologize for ghetto crime — attributing it to deprivation — not this time.

Even CBS focused its cameras on the sacking of the city.

Talk show host Tom Snyder expressed "disgust."

New York Mayor Abraham Beame called the hoodlums hoodlums.

London's Daily Mail gave two pages to the pillage captioned "The City That Went Berserk in the Dark."

London's Aily Telegraph focused on "Looters, Vandals, Arsonists Bring Terror to City."

London's Daily Express said "Civilization went out like a light."

What was different this time from the blackout in 1965? Then there were only a handful of arrests and no significant injuries.

If government teaches and preaches and demands that the workers must share what they have with the non-workers — juried: dozens of them seriously injured.

This time 900 fires; 55 big ones.

Whole blocks of businesses were obliterated as though from a bombing. Furniture showrooms emptied. From a single car dealership, 50 new Pontiacs stolen. And tons of TV sets, stereos, liquor, guns . . .

Shopkeepers in tears stood over the rubble that had been their livelihood — their investment of a lifetime — asking "Why?"

It was a dog-weary detective in the blighted Bedford-Stuyvesant section who named it "the night of the animals."

"In 1965," he explained, "we were dealing with human beings; these are animals."

What is it that threw evolution into reverse?

Is it that a Robin Hood government — taking from the rich and giving to the poor — has made thievery respectable?

If government teaches and preaches and demands that the workers must share what they have with the non-workers —

It is government which has been setting the bad example — penalizing the producers to reward the parasitic —

If it is government's fault for sponsoring the something-for-nothing philosophy —

How do we turn back?

Our Congress and our courts are not unmindful of their complicity.

But pragmatically, is there any way at this late date to re-earn spoiled brats?

Any way which will not put the torch to all our cities?

This is the consideration which must give them pause.

Just in jest

Have you ever wondered why so few men get face lifts? The answer is an interesting one. It is all because of a certain biological risk they run when they decide on that route to eternal youth. One face lift for men might not be so bad, but if they have to go back for seconds and thirds, all too often they'll find they are growing beards behind their ears.

Is there a GSA coverup?

By MARTHA ANGLE
and ROBERT WALTERS

WASHINGTON (NEA) — Only a few months ago, White House aide Walter Kallaur was being criticized by the General Services Administration because of irregularities in his handling of President Carter's pre-inaugural finances. Today, Kallaur is a $47,500-a-year executive at GSA.

That piece of political legerdemain may have deftly thwarted efforts by lower-level GSA employees to resolve nagging questions about the use of the $2 million fund to pay the Carter administration's expenses during the transition period between last year's election and this year's inauguration.

Kallaur, a Carter campaign worker during most of 1976, was in charge of managing the transition fund for the president-elect. But the law which established the fund gave shared authority over the money to GSA, the federal government's "housekeeper" and "purchasing agent."

Scores of White House aides, members of the President's cabinet and other high-ranking administration officials have been forced to return thousands of dollars initially authorized by Kallaur in the form of travel advances, per diem subsistence payments and expense reimbursement.

Still being disputed by GSA are numerous other items, including the expenditure of public funds for repairs to the personal auto of a Carter staff member, rental of a tuxedo by a presidential aide who needed formal attire to attend an inaugural week party and the processing of photographs of the President's daughter, Amy.

The official job description for Kallaur's new post as an associate administrator of GSA gives him direct authority over the agency's press relations and congressional relations, the most likely source of troublesome questions about those disbursements.

But Kallaur says it is "not contemplated" that he will exercise that authority, and that he plans to concentrate instead on policy and planning issues. Nevertheless, his presence in the executive wing at GSA's headquarters building here has caused lower ranking GSA staff members to have second thoughts about continuing to dispute his judgment in spending the transition money.

But even without Kallaur's direct intervention, the impact of the Carter administration's newfound political control of GSA is vividly demonstrated by the handling of a recent letter from Rep. Frederick W. Richmond, D-N.Y., requesting a complete listing of all expenditures on behalf of Carter and his staff during the transition period.

The GSA staff compiled a detailed list in response to the congressman's query, but major alterations were made by their bosses before the reply was mailed to Richmond, along with a covering letter from GSA Administrator Joel W. Solomon, one of several other Carter loyalists recently named to key policy-making positions at the agency.

Another recent attempt to quash the continuing controversy over the transition fund involves Jonathan Stein, Kallaur's deputy in overseeing disbursement of the Carter money.

According to a memo in GSA files, after Stein was informed in mid-June that an audit uncovered questionable payments he had received, he hastily repaid GSA $40 for a Washington-New York trip taken last Dec. 23 — almost six months earlier — and offered this explanation:

"It's not that this payment was really improper. I

Grasshopper diet making kitty ill

DEAR DR. MILLER: This is the first year we've had grasshoppers, or at least the first year Spitty, our cat, has found them. She's into the big hunt bit, and she actually does come up with quite a few of the hoppers, which go down. I mean she eats them. Predictably, as per your article I read, they don't do a thing to help her digestion. She tends to vomit them, usually on the rug. Is there anything I could be giving her by mouth to help avoid these disagreeable aftereffects? She also looks rather raunchy and is losing weight. I know it's all from her intensive grasshopper hunts. — A.K.

DEAR A.K.: While greedy grasshopper gobbling could indeed be the cause of Spitty's weight loss, only her veterinarian would know for sure. (Making that determination would be prudent.) The best cure for grasshopper-induced gastronomic revolt is to change your feline's fare. Since she won't switch willingly, better declare those hopper hunting grounds off-limits. Ensure compliance by switching Spitty to 100 per cent indoor living, at least till the hoppers have gone.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Awhile back you had an article about white cockatoos. I now have a chance to buy one. It's a bare-eyed cockatoo. I've seen prettier, but it seems very smart. I'd have it checked for the good health which it seems to enjoy, if I bought it, but what can you tell me about its personality? These birds are not cheap, as you know, and I'd like not to make a mistake if I can help it. — K.K.

DEAR K.K.: The bare-eyed cockatoos are highly intelligent birds, but their conversations don't necessarily reflect this. They are considered the most loquacious (but no more prone to screaming than others) of the cockatoos. Whether this particular parrot's personality fits into your plans could best be determined by spending some time with it before purchase. Cockatoos are not for everyone, certainly. Not with their large size and high cost. The price per year of ownership may be reasonable enough, and owners are often spared the trauma of their beloved pet's dying since these birds often live longer than the owner.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Can a tiny puppy with cleft palate ever be saved by an operation? At what age? or is this an impossible dream? — E.O.

DEAR E.O.: In most cases, cleft palate puppy surgery is indeed possible. Most often at six weeks of age.

Ann Landers

Keep your nose out of it!

Dear Ann Landers: Five years ago I married a man who was divorced and had two adopted boys. He paid child support and saw the boys every other weekend.

To be perfectly honest, I couldn't stand them because I knew they were not his flesh and blood. I told him he'd have to let their new step-father adopt them or I'd get a divorce. He finally consented to the adoption and promised NEVER to see the boys again.

I got pregnant last year and now he has a blood son. It's been three years since he's seen those adopted kids. Yesterday his ex-wife sent a letter saying, "The boys are doing fine." (She even had the gall to enclose pictures.) What burns me up is that she has no intention of telling the boys they were adopted. I think I should tell them. They are 12 and 13 — old enough to handle the truth. My husband says I'm wrong. He also says he's sorry he gave up his rights to see them — and it's my fault.

This problem has caused many fights. My husband claims he can't forget those kids and I am being unreasonable. They are NOT his blood sons and the thought of them makes me sick. Who is right? Shouldn't my husband tell them he's not and never was their REAL father? — Trouble Brewin'

Dear Trouble: I have always taken the position that adopted children should be told early that they were "chosen," and in a case where there is a step-parent, that, too, should be explained.

Since your husband and his former wife did NOT choose to do so — keep your nose out of it. I predict you're going to have your hands full holding your marriage together unless you fold out of this situation completely and let him do as he wishes in regard to his previous family.

Dear Ann Landers: It's been a while since you printed the letter from Good Fortune Cookie, the child who thought his step-dad was neat. I have not forgotten it. I'd like to advise any person about to wed a "single parent" that it is essential that you agree to joint discipline or make it clear at the outset that you will remain uninvolving.

Believe me, this is vital. You see, I too, was "neat," until it came time for my step-children to learn right from wrong.

All hell broke lose when my partner began challenging my authority and countermanding my disciplinary measures as if I was an interfering stranger.

If I did nothing, it meant more trouble. My non-action was interpreted as lack of love for the children. It didn't take long for the kids to pick this up. The result was extreme permissiveness, arguing between my spouse and myself and then — open warfare.

The kids couldn't care less. They pushed our marriage over the cliff and left. What about us? We are as divided as we were during the years when we fought about them. But we still live under one roof — like strangers, smiling on the outside and drying on the inside. Sign me — Substitute

Dear Substitute: You call that living? Too bad you didn't seek the help of a counselor early and straighten the mess out — or separate yourself from it.

A submarine windjammer

Question arises as to whether there has ever been a square-rigged submarine. Indeed. In May of 1921, the USSR-14 submarine ran out of fuel during a Pacific Ocean search for a missing tug. Its radio conked out, too. So the sub's crew first made a foresail out of a dozen hammocks with five pipe bunk frames and the torpedo loaded king post. Then they made a mainsail out of six blankets with curtain rods and a radio mast. Finally they made a mizzen sail out of eight blankets with more curtain rods and the torpedo loading king post stepped forward. Three days later, they pulled into Pearl Harbor, the first and last submarine windjammer ever to do so.

Q. "How big was the old $20 gold piece?"
A. About halfway between the size of a 50-cent piece and a silver dollar.

Q. "When was construction on the Great Wall of China started?"
A. 225 years before Christ.

Q. "Is there a patron saint for engineers?"
A. That would be Saint Ferdinand.

SICK SHEEP

A sick sheep is not inclined to let any other animal know it's feeling poorly. It fakes good health as long as possible. No, not because said sheep is bright. It's not. The tendency is a genetic trick, a defense against the natural inclination of predatory animals to pick off the weak.

portant derangements in normal body function.

The same thing happens to advanced diabetics who are not adequately controlled with insulin. Because the severe diabetic cannot use carbohydrates efficiently he may be using excess amounts of fat causing ketosis. In advanced stages this leads to diabetic acidosis.

Several other conditions wherein the body does not utilize carbohydrates properly can lead to this problem. This includes alcohol consumption. The alcoholic may have low blood sugar because the alcohol interferes with the liver's normal mechanisms to maintain blood sugar levels. The body uses fat and hence produces ketones in the urine.

I think you should have a careful metabolic study. You may have a basic metabolism reason for forming excess amounts of ketones. And it could be important even though it is not life threatening. Meanwhile, I could suggest that you be careful to maintain a sensible balanced diet, getting more of your carbohydrates from fresh (preferably raw) fruits and vegetables while avoiding the concentrated sweets and starches. Be sure and get your carbohydrates, though, in healthy bulk cereals and the fruit and vegetable group. These are important sources of vitamins.

T.J. sinks Reds

LOS ANGELES — Even Sparky Anderson may be about ready to toss in the towel.

After Tommy John blanked Cincinnati, 4-0, on a two-hitter Monday night, Anderson was first disconsolate and then testy.

"I'm not dead until they bury me," he commented, "but I have a terrible feeling they're about ready to."

The Reds had been saying they would have to sweep the four game series with the Dodgers. That would have cut the Dodger lead to 7½ games.

Monday night's loss moved the Angelinos back out to a 12½ game margin and now the best the Reds can do is cut it to 9½ if they take the remaining three games.

Anderson's ire stemmed from the ejection by third base umpire John McSherry of both Anderson and third baseman Pete Rose in the three-run Dodger third inning.

Tommy John started things with a one-out, line drive home run, his first as a National Leaguer and first since 1968.

Davey Lopes flied out to make it two out, but Bill Russell hit a double down the third base line and Reggie Smith followed with his 20th homer, a wrongfield shot, and his 60th and 61st runs batted in.

Rose thought Russell's double was a foul ball and the game was delayed about five minutes at that point while the matter was argued.

Rose's ejection came quickly and the rest of the time was Sparky's. His anger built and eventually he, too, was given the heave-ho.

"I didn't argue with the guy (McSherry)," he told writers. "I just told him that if he was 100 percent sure that Russell's ball was fair, then he was the blindest S.O.B. in the world. That's when he ran me."

The way John pitched, his own home run would have been enough. George Foster's infield hit in the second inning and Ken Griffey's double in the third were all the Reds got.

T.J. fanned five and walked only one. He retired the last 16 Reds in order with only one outfield putout. There were only four outfield putouts all told and only two in the last eight innings.

"I had great stuff," admitted John. "I didn't get behind any hitters all night and I think I had only the one three-ball count."

It was the seventh win in a row for the slim lefty who is now 13-4. He indeed has been the Dodger's stopper.

"It was great, just great shutting out the Reds," he said. "I enjoyed hitting the homer, but the pitching would have to rank higher in my book."

"When I came back (after surgery two years ago), I said I was going to hit one out. Last year I wrote Bowie Kuhn and asked him to jack the ball up."

"No, seriously, I didn't even swing hard. The ball hit the bat and jumped out."

The fourth run scored in the sixth inning on Ron Cey's one-out single, an infield out and Rick Monday's line drive single to center.

The runs all came off former APC star Paul Moskau (2-3). But it was an improvement over the only other time the husky (6-2, 210) Moskau faced the Dodgers.

In that game, he was belted for four hits and six runs in one third of an inning.

"I pitched a lot better this time, but not good enough," he said somberly. "The home runs came off bad pitches. Smith was looking for the pitch I gave him."

"This has been quite a year for me. I really didn't expect to come up (to the Reds) until Sept. and then probably just spend most of the time watching."

"I think it's better this way. I'm learning and adjusting now. I'd have to go through the same thing next year. I think Sparky realizes his pitching staff is very young and he's pointing toward next season."

Smith was kinder. "Moskau gave me a fastball outside," he said. "I hit it the only place I could hit it if I hit it at all. I'm impressed with him."

The homer gave us breathing room, that's all. T.J. was the impressive one. It's a pleasure to watch him pitch the way he has been pitching."

DODGER DATA — Doug Rau (12-2) and Doug Capilla (3-4), both lefthanders, will do the pitching tonight.

The Dodgers now have 134 home runs. The stadium record is 140 set in 1962.

Roberts 'chooses' Player of Year

If Bill Roberts' assessment is correct, Ganesha High center George Hawthorne will be the player to watch in valley basketball next winter.

"I really think George will be the Player of the Year next season," said Roberts, Damien's head basketball coach. "There's almost no doubt in my mind."

Why would a coach make such an appraisal of a San Antonio League rival in the middle of the summer? Because Roberts just finished coaching the Inland team of the Olympic Development League, of which Hawthorne was a member.

Other valley players on the prestigious team were recent graduates Bill Duffy of Damien, Rich Davis of Alta Loma and Bruce LaValle of Montclair as well as Ganesha's James Verdon and Vince Hall, Claremont's Derek Britton and Upland's Brian Patterson, all of whom will be seniors this fall.

Roberts, Gary Smith of the University of Redlands and assistant coach Steve Scoggan of Victor Valley High coached the Inland squad to third place in the eight-team Olympic Development League. The championship team was San Fernando Valley, which featured Crescenta Valley's high-scoring Greg Goorjian as well as Barry Brooks and Keith Stephens of CIF 4A title-winning Pasadena High.

Inland was led by the play of CIF 2A Player of the Year Tony Anderson of Victor Valley and CIF 3A co-Player of the Year Duffy. But Hawthorne was the big surprise.

"George really looked good," Roberts said of the 6-10 center. "We used several centers, but George probably got more playing time than any of the others," including Oregon-bound Davis.

"Rich missed quite a few practices," said Roberts. "He started playing more toward the end of the season but by then we were pretty well set on our team so he didn't get to play that much."

"But another player who was much improved was LaValle. He was our third or fourth forward."

Verdon, Hall and Britton did not see much playing time, according to Roberts, and Patterson sat out nearly the entire season because of an Achilles tendon injury.

Duffy really didn't play all that well either," said Roberts, "because he had very sore knees all summer. He's just played so much basketball the last couple of years that I think it caught up to him."

Anderson amazing

Victor Valley's Anderson led the league in scoring with a 27-point average.

"Tony is amazing," Roberts said. "He's just an above-average ballplayer as far as physical talent goes but he's the most competitive player I've ever been around. He keeps going just as hard no matter how tired he gets."

"Tony played guard and forward for us," Roberts continued. "He goes to the basket as hard as anyone — in fact in one game he scored 42 points and they were all on drives to the basket and foul shots."

Ralph Paspal, who will be a senior at Damien this fall, played on the San Gabriel Valley entry in the ODL, while Upland High's Nan Fowler and Carol Moser have been standouts in the Girls League of the ODL. Moser is among the league leaders in both scoring and assists.

Joe Vigil and Steve Stanier, two Damien sophomores (this coming school year), played for the North Orange County team in the junior high division.

"Watch for Vigil," said Roberts. "He's an outstanding athlete in football, basketball and baseball."

Roberts, who has coached in the ODL for two years, said this was his last season. "I like the kids," he said, "but I want to spend more time with my family next summer."

Three former Ganesha High football players are expected to do quite well this fall on the collegiate level — based on their performances in spring ball.

Arthur Lane, who in 1976 was leading the Western Athletic Conference in rushing as an Arizona State freshman before injuring his knee, picked up 97 yards on 14 carries in ASU's spring game.

Lloyd Jones was the leading receiver in Brigham Young's spring game. The fleet end caught five passes for 75 yards and a touchdown.

Finally, Michael Johnson, a 6-foot-2, 240-pounder, was chosen Idaho State's most improved lineman in spring practice and has a good chance at starting at defensive tackle this fall.

All three former Giants are entering their sophomore years.

Market activity

NEW YORK (UPI) — The stock market, aided by bargain hunters, rallied higher Tuesday morning in moderate trading.

The Dow Jones industrial average, down about two points at the outset, was ahead 1.91 points to 881.33 shortly before noon EDT. The closely watched average plunged 9.27 points Monday, putting it at a 19-month low.

Analysts, noting the Dow had dropped 125 points since the first of the year, said the market's slide the past three weeks attracted some investors because it has left many bluechip issues at bargain prices.

Some investors may have been encouraged by a Conference Board survey that showed consumer spending plans were sharply higher, even though consumer confidence was up only a little.

Also, consumer credit rose a strong $2.28 billion in July, according to the Federal Reserve Board. Nevertheless, the market was hindered as fears the Fed would have to tighten credit to stem a surge lately in the nation's money supply.

Market breadth figures reflected some investor uncertainty. Advances led declines, 587 to 471, among the 1,602 issues crossing the tape. There were 544 unchanged issues.

New York Stock Exchange volume at the two-hour mark amounted to about 8,200,000 shares up from the 6,740,000 traded during the same period Monday, the slowest session in 10 weeks.

Twentieth Century-Fox was the most active NYSE issue, up to 25. The company, whose movie "Star Wars" has set boxoffice records, had sharply higher second-quarter earnings.

Loews Corp., another entertainment company which gained 5 1/2 points Monday, was ahead 1 1/4. The firm's second-quarter earnings were sharply higher, aided by the sale of its cigarette business outside the United States.

Resnolds Metals was the second most active issue, off 1 1/2 to 36 in trading that included a block of 100,000 shares at 36 1/4. TWA was the third most active issue, off 1/2 to 9 1/4.

Tektronix was ahead 1 1/2 to 35 1/2 in active trading. The firm announced Monday it was offering 850,000 secondary shares at $34.875 a share.

Prices were higher in active trading of American Stock Exchange issues. Kewanee Industries, the most active issue, was ahead 1 1/4 to 45 1/2. Gulf Oil upped its tender offer to $47.50 a share for Kewanee stock and said it had already bought 68 per cent of the total shares outstanding. Hamilton Brothers and Crown Central Petroleum have offered $46.50 a share in the takeover battle.

Brown aids campaign

SACRAMENTO (AP) — Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. is joining a Republican law-and-order legislator and the California Chamber of Commerce in supporting a "Use a Gun — Go to Prison" campaign.

The Democratic governor's office reported Sunday that Brown is to appear at a Los Angeles news conference today with state Sen. George Deukmejian, R-Long Beach, chairman of the Stop Crime Coalition, which is supported by the state chamber.

Today's birthdays: Meteorologist Gordon Dunn is 72 years old. Former movie star Charles Farrell is 76.

Thought for today: Judge a man by his questions rather than his answers — Voltaire, French writer, 1694-1778.
